On Sept. 20, 2018, GLASS Atlanta celebrated our new facilities with an open house. About 75 attendees came to the open house, including patrons, State Librarian Julie Walker, employees of Georgia Public Library Service and GLASS staff.

The special guest and opening speaker was Georgia’s first lady, Sandra Deal. A supporter of libraries and of childhood literacy, Mrs. Deal stood in front of our display of children’s print/braille books and spoke about the importance of reading, specifically to children, and of serving Georgians with disabilities.

The date of the open house was also near Constitution Day, which is Sept. 17. To celebrate, Daughters of the American Revolution member Judy Dyer brought a braille copy of the U.S. Constitution for attendees to read. A tactile American flag allowed attendees to feel the stripes of the flag while reading the pledge in braille.
Obituary: Former GLASS Director Stella Cone

We’re sad to share that former GLASS Director Stella Cone passed away Thursday, Sept. 13, after her battle with liver disease.

Stella had a long history of serving people with disabilities. For over 10 years she was head of Disabilities Services with North Dakota State Library. In 2006, her continued work with talking book libraries led her to Georgia where for more than a decade she served, mostly as the director of GLASS. She strove to support people with print impairments, forming bonds with local, statewide and national organizations to further her work.

Upon her retirement in 2016, she received a plaque of appreciation from the National Library Service for the Blind and Physically Handicapped for her almost 25 years of service. State Librarian Julie Walker joined in the presentation of the award.

We appreciate the work of Stella, and will miss her as our colleague, friend, and advocate for people with disabilities.

Marrakesh Treaty Implementation Act Signed

In October President Trump signed the Marrakesh Treaty Implementation Act. The implementation of this act will allow increased and easier access to copyrighted books in countries that have signed the Marrakesh Treaty.

The United States joins over 40 countries that have agreed to this treaty, expanding access to accessible reading material in the United States. It will also ease the exchange of materials amongst countries that are signatories for the Marrakesh Treaty, making more accessible books available to readers with disabilities worldwide.

The passing of the Marrakesh Treaty and the push in the United States for implementation of the act are the results of years of hard work by activists and advocates fighting for increased access to copyrighted works.
GLASS Oral History Project

Are you a GLASS patron or eligible to be a GLASS patron? Would you like to share your story as someone with a disability? We’d love to talk with you!

The GLASS Oral History Project: Our Stories, Our Lives is in its beginning stages, and is being undertaken as a joint project with the Russell Library, a part of the University of Georgia Libraries, Special Collections.
